An aerial photograph of a town built on a hillside, with a large, ornate cathedral in the foreground. The scene is captured at sunset, with warm orange and pink light illuminating the buildings and the sky. The cathedral has a prominent spire and is surrounded by other buildings and greenery. The town extends up the hillside, and a large green field is visible in the lower right. The sky is filled with soft, colorful clouds.

Building a future for music

The Music School Transformation Project offers you a unique opportunity to change the lives of current and future pupils.

TRANSFORM
THEIR WORLD
WITH MUSIC

Music doesn't just change how we feel – it changes how we think. The science is clear that an education in music transforms brain development in a myriad of ways, improving skills ranging from verbal reasoning, to pattern recognition and concentration.

Our music teaching reflects this fact, equipping all pupils – including elite performers – with skills that will enable them to thrive throughout their lives.

Music education benefits everyone

As with any craft, progress is predicated on paying attention to the finest of details. However, for pupils to hone this skill, we, in turn, must pay attention to the environment we provide for them.

To provide the best possible environment, we have developed our Music School Transformation Project for 2023.

The proposed redevelopment will radically enhance the daily experience of all pupils by: creating focused academic teaching areas; providing support for contemporary music; improving acoustics; reducing sound transference, and creating a better home for our instruments, including our new Steinway pianos.

Work is scheduled to begin in August 2022, but we need your philanthropic support now to transform the current building into a fit-for-purpose facility for the pupils of today and tomorrow.

Your endowment – which can include the naming of the Music School and its rooms – will create a lasting legacy of musical excellence and formative memories, all made at Malvern College.

Learning in harmony

From acoustic treatment to climate control, the finest details play a vital role in shaping the requisite environment for music practice and performance.

The Music School building started life a world away from music performance, opening its doors in 1851 as a spa. Indeed, many Old Malvernians will know the Music School as 'The Monastery' – yet another clue to the building's multi-purpose history. We now have the opportunity to transform an old building – which happened to have suitably sized monk cells and large meeting rooms – into a beautiful, bespoke and dedicated department with music firmly in mind.

The Music School Transformation Project

The Music School will be transformed into three zones:

Solo teaching and ensemble performance zone

The Lyon Room will be renamed the Tia Tanna Room. Technical upgrades to this will transform the room into a first-class performance venue and rehearsal space.

Academic teaching zone

A computer suite comprising 20 computer stations for composition work, a classroom for general music teaching, a smaller space for 6th Form teaching and breakout rooms for instrumental work.

Contemporary music and recording zone

A new area created to the highest possible standard including a high specification recording facility for all styles of music.

Goals of the Transformation Project

- ◆ Provide an inspirational environment for pupils and staff as well as parents and visitors
- ◆ Optimise the use of space for academic teaching and ensemble rehearsals and performance
- ◆ Improve sound-proofing and sound quality in practice and teaching rooms
- ◆ Improve sound-proofing in classrooms
- ◆ Create a suitable environment for instruments, including our new Steinway pianos

Our Steinway success story

The first phase of our Music School transformation was successfully completed in 2020 with the delivery of 28 Steinway pianos.

We are now one of only 20 schools in the UK accorded All-Steinway School status. As such we are demonstrating a commitment to excellence by providing our pupils with the best equipment possible for the study of music as well as access to masterclasses and recitals given by Steinway artists.

We couldn't have achieved this without generous philanthropic support.

“Everything I want to achieve in music can be expressed when I sit down to play a Steinway. When we received the pianos, all I wanted to do was explore!”
